Pembina Re-opening 1975

Henry Marshall Tory, then President of the University, reported to the Board of Governors in 1913 that difficulties in securing money had rendered progress in the building of a third residence impossible. He was nevertheless hopeful that the residence, to be known as Pembina Hall, would be ready for the 1914-15 academic session, since it would be indispensable by then.

Sixty-two years later President Harry E. Gunning experienced similar concerns over renovations being carried out on the same building, those being that the work would not be completed in time for the anticipated re-opening of the residence. With students in the midst of a severe housing shortage, Pembina was, then too, indispensable. In both cases, the openings fell slightly behind the expected mark but not so far as to prohibit occupancy within the respective academic sessions.

On November 27, 1975, Pembina is being officially re-opened after just over a year of face-lifting and pulling up the slack in its internal workings. New life has been restored to this, the third oldest University structure, at a time when nearly every available square foot of floor space on campus is being fully utilized, and the student housing problem has reached one of its most critical periods.

Prior to the original opening of Pembina, space was also at a premium with classrooms, laboratories, and administration as well as student and faculty housing crammed into all of two buildings, Athabasca and Assiniboia Halls. The University was virtually bursting its seams. Therefore even before the work had been entirely finished, nurses from University Hospital moved in to occupy two floors of the south wing. Later, the north end of the building was developed for classrooms, labs, and offices. The stiff lab (i.e., Anatomy), as it was known, occupied the space where rooms 349 to 356 now stand.

Pembina continued to be used as an all-purpose building including its use as a men's residence in 1916 when the Red Deer Ladies' College moved into Assiniboia with their principal, Reverend Keith. As classroom space had become available in the newly completed Arts Building the offices and classrooms in Pembina were vacated. With the advent of World War I space for student accommodation was not pressing so the conversion of this space to residence rooms was delayed until 1919. In the meantime the effects of a world-wide influenza epidemic had reached Edmonton and on October 25, 1918 a special delegation from the Board of Health was sent to request the use of Pembina as a temporary hospital. This request was granted and Pembina gave shelter to the more serious cases, many of which were considered to be hopeless. This was a sad time for Pembina, which witnessed some eighty deaths.

Dr. Geneva Misener, a professor of Classics, was named the first Advisor to Women in 1919 when the building became the women's residence. The following year, Florence Dodd assumed that role which served the function of advisor and administrator in residence. That same year a tradition was established in Pembina which was to be an annual event for some years. It was a formal dance illiteratively referred to as the Pembina Prance. This event was put on by the Pembinites and was supposed to be restricted to these ladies and their escorts. One year, however, as Reg Lister, former Superintendent of Residences, was to recall, the Burgess (upper right), the original architect of Pembina at age one hundred, a year before his death in 1971. He gave the order that Pembina's framework be constructed of steel and cement, a decision which years later was to save the University heavy costs related to the gutting and rebuilding from within as in the cases of Athabasca and Assiniboia. men of Athabasca found a tunnel which runs underground from Athabasca to Pembina.

Once through the tunnel, the boys pulled the main switch and blacked out the entire building. Someone found a candle and gave it to Miss Dodd so that everyone could see where she was and she could only see as far as the candle would light. It wasn't long before the invasion was complete.

One student was so incensed that he reported the whole affair to President Wallace. Later that evening the student was secretly apprehended and tried in a kangaroo court out in White Mud. There he was found guilty and sentenced to the fly-paper treatment—a demeaning punishment which has been likened to the public stocks or pillory.

Miss Dodd remained in Pembina until 1941 when the Department of National Defense requisitioned the University residences and the Normal School (Corbett Hall) for the officers and enlisted men stationed with the Number Four Initial Training School of the RCAF. This presented the students remaining with a severe housing shortage which was to peak in 1944, a full year before the residences were turned over to the University.

Upon leaving Pembina, Group Captain J. Hutchinson who had taken quarters in Miss Dodd's suite made a gift of an airplane propeller to the residence. This propeller was said to have been taken from the first airplane to cross the hump to China. But that wasn't the only memento left of the years when Pembina played hostess to nearly three hundred wartime guests. What had been a kitchenette was converted into a bar; a hole was cut in the basement wall, leaving only one pillar to support the remaining wall; doors were removed from the enlisted men's rooms and some of the floors were scarred by cigarette butts tossed into the corridor.

When the time came to return the building to its original state, there was a general upheaval as to where everything had been stored; the change from residence to barracks four years earlier had been such a rapid one, that the furniture, linen and other materials were hastily stored here and there across campus. Reg Lister's recollections of these and other events are all vividly related in his book My Forty Years on the Campus.

Mary Faunt served as warden of Pembina in the academic year of 1945-46 following the departure of the RCAF training school. She was succeeded by Constance MacFarlane who was instrumental in the decision to add the outside fire escapes. Elevators were proposed for Pembina during those years but were considered too costly since students could

One of the foremost concerns during the renovation process was to maintain the basic character of Pembina. The leaded glass windows (top) have been retained, as has the interior woodwork. Two Pembinites (upper left) play a round of cards between classes. In those days (1919) black robes were worn to classes. The dining hall in Pembina in 1929 (upper right) was so crammed that two tables of ladies had to be served in Athabasca's larger dining hall. readily be engaged to assist in carrying up the trunks and suitcases on moving-in days.

In 1948 Maimie Simpson assumed both roles as warden of Pembina and Advisor to Women, the latter appointment continuing under the newly designated title of Dean of Women in 1951. She occupied the warden's suite until 1960 having helped open Pembina House in 1959 at Number One University Campus. Succeeding her from 1960 to 1963 were Miss Stinson, Miss Berry, and Miss Bradshaw. Ruth Bradshaw served during Pembina's last year as an exclusively undergraduate residence. In 1964 Pembina became a residence for senior and graduate women with Martha Munz as warden followed by Mrs. J. Grant Sparling who was simultaneously Dean of Women.

The early seventies were dark years for Pembina with the threat of demolition hovering dangerously close at hand. Changes in the building safety codes had left Pembina, Athabasca and Assiniboia sadly lacking and the three were scheduled to be torn down to make room for a graduate residence complex. Almost at the last minute, however, these plans were halted. Under pressure from what seemed to be endless lists of individuals protesting the destruction of Pembina, the Board of Governors reversed their decision.

The possibility of restoring Pembina suddenly became an exciting one and one that proved to be practical too. The cost of restoring Pembina to meet the prevailing needs was less than what would have been necessary to erect a new building. Unfortunately this much can not be said with assurance of Athabasca or Assiniboia. It has been said of Pembina though that a building designed for use today as a residence could conceivably be built along similar lines as Pembina now stands.

New carpeting, concealed wiring and ventilation, paint, plumbing fixtures and drapes have all been added. But in spite of these changes, little has been removed of the stately charm which has always characterized Pembina. Nearly all of the rich wood panelling and trim have been restored and the marble remains. It appears as though Pembina, which has served the University so well for so many years, will continue to do so for many more to come.

THE ARCHITECT'S APPROACH

By ensuring that the structure of Pembina Hall was constructed of steel and cement, Cecil Burgess planted the first seed towards its restitution. According to M. Holland, of Bittorf-Holland-Christianson Architects

Limited, this factor enabled the renovations of Pembina Hall to be completed at less than the cost of a new building. Although the cost of renovation is an important and, sometimes, a decisive element in considering the renovation of old buildings, Mr. Holland thinks that their historical significance should be of major importance. To this end, the renovations of Pembina Hall have been carried out with careful attention to every aspect of the building. Additions made within the last few years were removed, and the new mechanical system for heating and ventilation was hidden in the walls and ceilings. Many consultations with the City of Edmonton regarding safety code requirements ensured that the standards could be followed within the structure of the building. Most important, wood finishings were restored, lobby furniture was reupholstered, and anything of historical importance was preserved. Thanks to Mr. Holland and his firm, Pembina Hall will remain an aesthetic feature on the University landscape.

CANSAVE CERTIFICATE OF APPRECIATION

Noel Parker-Jervis, Assistant Professor of English, was recently presented with a Certificate of Appreciation for his efforts on behalf of the needy children of the world. The presentation was made on behalf of the Canadian Save the Children Fund by Mary LeMessurier, Past Chairman of the Edmonton Branch and Vice-President of CANSAVE.

The citation stressed that the award was CANSAVE's way of saying thanks not only to Professor Parker-Jervis for the leadership he has given, but also for the work of the students and all those associated with him. Although Professor Parker-Jervis did initiate and sustain the CANSAVE program on campus, he does ask that it be noted that the work has always been run by volunteers from the English Department, students, academics, and non-academics alike. He adds that none of their efforts would work if the University at large did not respond as generously as it does.

CANSAVE Christmas cards and other CANSAVE items are now on sale at the English Department General Office, 3-5 Humanities Centre.

CHRISTMAS BUREAU

For some years now, needy families in Edmonton have been better able to celebrate Christmas through the help of the Christmas Bureau and those who support it. The Bureau supplies interested individuals or groups with the names and addresses of the families, along with information on the number of children, their ages, and their needs. The name of the family's social worker also is supplied, so those participating can seek further information if they need it. Christmas parcels prepared for the families usually include a food hamper, gifts of clothing and toys, and any other items that might be suggested by the social worker.

For those staff members who would like to
